Teaching Kids to Talk

Kids ages seven and older love spending time with their friends, but what do they do when they run out of things to talk about?

Instead of things going downhill fast with a round of "Truth or Dare", now you can engage your child and their friends in interesting yet colorful conversation topics that reveal surprising facts with great games like Camp Talk, Buddy Talk, and Teen Talk.

We love Family Talk at our house, so we were excited to see these innovative new offerings from Around The Table Games.

Camp Talk, Buddy Talk, and Teen Talk were each inspired and created for kids, by kids. Each of the three games comes with 50 conversation bubble-shaped cards affixed to a handy ring for go-anywhere fun!

Camp Talk is a great game for kids to bring to summer camp so that they can get to know new camp friends! Family camp outs will be so much fun as Camp Talk allows you to learn about each loved one on a deeper level. Camp Talk even comes with a little flashlight and compass for your times of bonding in the great outdoors.

If you wrote your own campfire song, what would it be about?

Buddy Talk is 50 fun questions designed for friends to learn more about one another! Portable enough to take anywhere, Buddy Talk is full of thought provoking questions such as,

If you could have picked your own name, what would it be?

For teens, there is Teen Talk! Since the teen years are a time of getting to know who YOU are as a person, I think these are good topics for self-reflection as well. Here's a small sample of the questions included in Teen Talk:

What influences you the most?

What is the weirdest dream you've ever had?

Do you think guys/girls act or talk differently online than they do in person? Why?

Each of these wonderful games is available for only $7.99 at AroundTheTableGames.com

Thanks to Around The Table Games for providing Mom Most Traveled with a sample of Buddy Talk!
